How To Write the Conclusion

Your conclusion needs to give the judges the last impression of who you are. It should leave them remembering you.

Your conclusion should do these three things:

- Wrap up your story by summing up your main points
- Clarify your thesis in a new and fresh way
- Answer the question: Why is all this important?

It is important that you wrap up the highlights of your essay, without diving into the details. Because you have already done that throughout your essay. Don't copy and paste earlier parts of your essay.

This is where you need to answer, why does all this matter to you? What are your hopes for the future? Where do you see yourself in a few years? This is the place to share them. Find a way to connect to your original story that you started your essay with.

A conclusion is a good place for you to explain how the scholarship will help you reach your goals. Share how you plan to use the life lesson from your essay in your future plans, to meet goals or dreams.

Remember, up until now your essay was about your past. The conclusion is your chance to bring the judge back to your present and talk about the future.

For example, if you started your essay by sharing a specific experience... You can conclude the essay by explaining how that experience will impact you in the future.

Let's say that you opened your essay by sharing that you got lost in the woods one time. Your conclusion would be a great place to bring that story back and connect it with the now. You might say "I haven't gotten lost in the woods lately but I still get a thrill every time I go explore unknown territories. This thrill has led me all over the world."

Scholarship committees have thousands of students to choose from. They want to make sure that the students they choose will get the most out of winning the scholarships.

Ideas On How to End a Scholarship Essay

- End the conclusion with dialogue- this could be words of admiration from a character in the story such as a mentor, parents, or teacher.
- Action- Leave the essay open-ended so that the reader thinks about you. For example, "I put on my jacket and stepped outside confidently."
- End the conclusion with a description: "The sun began to peak out from the clouds, sending rays of orange and red throughout the sky, warming my face and brightening up the world."

Just like the introduction should draw in the judges, your conclusion needs to leave a lasting impression.

Finally, don't forget to revise your paper as well as have family or a teacher also revise it. Revision is necessary for a successful paper. Make sure that you have not left any questions unanswered in your essay. If so, your conclusion is a good place to answer those questions.

Conclusion Example:

Well, I can't promise that I'm going to find a cure for cancer or the AIDS virus, but, I know one thing is true. The way my eyes would brighten up when we sang that song is the same way they brighten up when I think about my future. While I may not find the cure for fatal illnesses, I know that my passion for the field will defeat any hurdle that stands in my way and that I am going to do everything to be the best doctor that I can be.
